Scientific Advisory Board (SAB)

Prof. Dr. rer. nat. Martin Scheffner
University of Konstanz, Germany

Due to the notion that Angelman Syndrome (AS) is - by definition - a rare disorder, AS has for a long time not received the attention that would be required to make a difference in both the academic and pharmaceutical worlds. In the past ten years, this has changed, mainly due to the spirit and dedication of families with AS children to bring together scientists from basic and clinically oriented research areas. The most recent highlight of such gatherings has been the biennial international scientific conference of the Angelman Syndrome Alliance (ASA), which will be held in Germany in 2018. In the ASA conference, distinguished scientists and clinicians/pediatricians working on different AS-related aspects will present and discuss newest findings and developments, including novel therapeutic strategies and their potential pitfalls. Needless to say that such discussions are invaluable for the progress of AS research with respect to both elucidation of the mechanisms underlying AS and the development of treatment strategies. The participation of parent organizations from all over the world is an important feature of the ASA conference. Besides the notion that the regular contact with AS families provides AS researchers with a particular motivation, this will ensure that the progress made is communicated to AS families.

Univ. Prof. Dr. Harald Sitte
Medical University of Vienna, Austria

A strong base for networking activities is necessary to stay up to date and in touch with all the researchers that have one common goal in mind: to understand how the Angelman Syndrome essentially works and what to do to alleviate its symptoms for the patients and their families. In this regard, a biennial European meeting is of utmost relevance for all researchers interested in the Angelman Syndrome and adjacent rare disorders.
